Title: Theories of Counseling and Addictions: Best Evidence, Techniques and Skills for Clinical Supervision

Over the years many have come to know Don as a helpful friend, challenging mentor, encouraging colleague, and "faithful listener." At the same time corporations, states, academic and government entities have sought his attention and counsel. "Dr. OZ" is director and professor of the graduate addictions counseling program at Indiana Wesleyan University. He is the vice chair of the Indiana Behavioral Health and Human Services Licensure Board, and serves as chair of the Professional Affairs and Practice Standards Committee for the National Association of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counselors (NAADAC). Don is the past chair of the National Addiction Studies Accreditation Commission (NASAC) and is a past national president of NAADAC. In Indiana he is licensed in Clinical Addictions, Mental Health, Social Work and Marriage and Family Therapy. Nationally he is certified as a Master Addiction Counselor. He has been in the behavioral health and addictions field for almost forty years, serving in positions from psychiatric case manager, van driver to medical administrator. Don is an ordained minister, is married to his best friend Cindy, and is an avid St. Louis Cardinals fan. In his spare time he can be found enjoying Dunkin Donuts coffee while trying to make sense of DSM V, and understanding the "nuances of APA format."

Workshop Description: July 10th

Dr. Osborn will survey and convey findings on the most empirically supported theories of counseling with synthesis to addictions counseling. The objectives are to improve the understanding of counseling theory for students, or new clinicians, and confirm proper application in clinical supervision. Salient concepts and components related to effective techniques and skills will be examined. Addictions counseling and treatment dynamics will be an integrative part of the theories surveyed. Some attention will be given to ethical considerations for the clinician's scope of practice. Participants will find this workshop enhances their expertise and accountability as consummate professionals.
